CALL FOR NOMINATIONS

SESSION 2, 2007 ELECTION OF STUDENT MEMBERS TO FACULTY BOARDS

Nominations are invited for the election of student members to the following Faculty Boards for the 12 month period commencing 1 January 2008:

ENGINEERING 10 positions available
LAW 14 positions available

Any student enrolled as a candidate for a degree, diploma or certificate in either of the above Faculties is entitled to stand for election, nominate candidates and vote in an election for membership of that Faculty Board. A student enrolled as a candidate for a degree, diploma or certificate (or combination), awarded by more than one Faculty (eg. BA LLB, BCom LLB, BE BSc), is eligible to stand for election, nominate candidates and vote in an election for membership of each such Faculty Board, provided that the student is currently enrolled in a subject (course) controlled by that Faculty.

Nomination forms are available from:
- Faculty and School Offices
- the elections web site at: www.elections.unsw.edu.au

Nominations must reach the Returning Officer, Room 222B (enter through Room 222), The Chancellery, before 5.00pm on THURSDAY 20 SEPTEMBER 2007.

If more nominations are accepted than there are places available, ballots will be conducted closing at 5.00pm on Friday 12 October 2007.

NOMINATIONS OPEN:  THURSDAY 30 AUGUST 2007
NOMINATIONS CLOSE:  5.00PM THURSDAY 20 SEPTEMBER 2007

Dear Reader,

This week is Environment Week, and so our over-promotionally supportive Blitz takes the same theme. This week there will be lots of events going on designed to raise awareness about environmental issues. The part I am looking forward to is the political forum on Monday, which will feature Peter Garrett and Kerry Nettle. Given that many Greens see Garrett’s induction to the Labour Party as a complete sell-out of all his environmental credibility, no doubt this will be a heated forum.

Over the years I’ve had many friends who are environmental activists. What always amazed me was their overwhelming community spirit. You can tell a greenie because they will give you their last sandwich, or offer you a lift, or find you a place to crash. The other thing that struck me was their overwhelming practicality; they know how to make every last drop count, or how to get the most out of anything. If you have never hung out with any activists before then I am sure your preconceptions will be challenged. A great way to meet some would be to attend the Rock for Renewables at the Roundhouse on Wednesday at 5pm.

This year I worked hard to try and get the student body to contribute to Blitz. I have been overwhelmed by the response, and as such many people have waited quite some time to see their articles in print. However, as of next week I will have printed almost all contributions to Blitz I have on file, so please send me more! There is a contributor’s email list you can join by emailing me, and I run a weekly meeting from 1:30-2:30pm on Wednesdays at the Blockhouse in which you can discuss your articles or article ideas.

"We have not inherited the world from our forefathers -- we have borrowed it from our children."

This Kashmiri proverb could be applied to an assortment of issues that are affecting our current society. This week I am choosing to apply this wisdom to the issue of environmental sustainability and climate change. They say that climate change and sustainability will be for our generation what the Vietnam War was for our parents. To give an example, a recent poll of primary-aged children found that their biggest fear was the destruction of the earth as a result of human pollution, environmental mismanagement and climate change. Over the next few years, governments, institutions and individuals will rise and fall in light of how they handle this scientific and social issue. On a personal level, I’m sure many of us haven’t even thought of having children, but one day we will have children of our own. What kind of world will we be leaving them?

The issue of climate change and sustainability could easily be doom and gloom, fire and brimstone but there is some hope if we act quickly. It’s rather convenient then that this week is Arc Environment Week. This week is all about learning how we can be environmentally responsible and sustainable. The Environment Collective have put together a wonderful line up of forums, discussions and exhibitions to showcase how you can make a difference. The week also includes a visit from everyone’s favourite singing politician Peter Garrett. Kerry Nettle will be joining Peter Garrett to discuss environmental policy and issues at a federal level. The week’s events will also include live music down in the Roundhouse Beergarden on Wednesday night. Several organisations will also be providing information on how you can live a more sustainable life both at home, at uni and at the office.

The Arc is not the only area where great things are happening in terms of sustainability. The university and members of its community are involved in several environmental initiatives and research. These include research on photovoltaic cells, designing household whitegoods that don’t use water, researching and predicting the effects of climate change and running educational programs that inform members of the wider community about climate change.

While UNSW aims to be a leader in sustainability there are so many things that can be down at a grassroots level. These include replacing your light bulbs at home with low energy light bulbs, turning off computers when not in use, recycling at home and printing double-sided at work and uni. Fundraisers such as ‘Tree the World’ are volunteers for the Fred Hollows Foundation; they will be treeing the world and raising funds by charging people to plant trees on their behalf.

On a completely different note, I just wanted to extend a personal thank you to everyone who participated in the Arc survey. As a result of your participation we have some very constructive feedback. We will now begin to format our membership proposition for 2008. Watch this space and the Arc website for more information about membership in the immediate future.

Good luck for all those in the thick of assessment. Hang in there it’s almost mid-session break and summer is coming. If you need a study break why not check out Arc Environment Week? Don’t forget to recycle this edition of Blitz when you finish reading it and as you do, remember that the “ultimate test of a moral society is the kind of world that it leaves to its children.”

Earth! Fire! Wind! Water! Heart! Goooo Planet! This week is UNSW Enviro Week. Climate change has brought environmental issues to the fore and more and more people are getting involved. The idea behind Enviro Week is to focus on our impact on the environment and the positive things that we can all do to help it. Mother Earth is in need of some serious lovin’ and we’re greased-up and ready for action.

During Enviro Week, the Arc will be holding events with the goal of raising awareness about environmental issues and letting people know how they can be involved and make a difference.

There are many events happening and the week is getting started with an address by Peter Garrett and Kerry Nettle on Monday afternoon. A highlight is Wednesday night’s gig, Rock for Renewables starting at 4pm in the Roundhouse. Hope to see you there. All the events are listed in What’s On and there is more info about the events on page 20.

What is Environment Week?

You can get involved in these amazing initiatives, or start your own, by coming along to one of the weekly Collective meetings, on Wednesdays from 1-2pm on the Quadrangle Lawn. Look out for the banner so you can find them. Getting involved means that you can learn about environmental issues, share your own knowledge and experiences with others, and take action on the things that you think need to be changed.

Other great reasons to become an activist include meeting a lot of people from different units and organisations, travelling the country to different forums and events and feeling positive about making a difference. For more information, visit the website: www.envirocollective.unsw.edu.au or email one of the Arc enviro convenors: Angie (a.rozali@arc.unsw.edu.au) or Scarlet (s.wilcock@unsw.edu.au).

Heard of the Arc’s Enviro Collective, but not sure what it is?

The Arc’s Enviro Collective is wonderful and varied bunch of environmentally-conscious students who campaign and run projects to make a greener world. They always make sure they have tons of fun, plenty of yummy food co-op treats, and support for each other to become great environmental activists. The Enviro Collective is run out of the ‘Activist’s Jungle’ room in the Arc Blockhouse – Level One. The room has just been painted and is a friendly, warm and creative space where anyone can pop in and say “hi”. Just ask Arc Reception where it is and they will point you in the right direction.

Some of the things the Arc’s Enviro Collective has done so far include:

- Host an amazing Clean Energy week in Semester 1, which included their famous pedal power smoothie maker, and a host of workshops and forums
- Campaigned for a bike workshed for everyone to fix their bikes and make some new friends – this is coming soon, so watch Blitz for details
- Making the very colourful Enviropads that you may have seen around the place. The Arc’s Enviro Collective collects paper that has only been used on one side, binds it, and ... eureka! It’s a lecture pad! It’s a wonderful way to reduce waste and save trees.
- Running a wonderful Stationery Re-use Centre, located in B13, where we collect secondhand stationery to make available to the whole UNSW community. So check it out!
- Attending a national environmental conference, Students of Sustainability, in Perth in semester break to meet with other Uni planeteers.
UNSW has recently re-committed to “practising what it teaches” to tackle the environmental impacts of its numerous and varied activities. Climate change has emerged as a key challenge, and the University’s senior management is currently working with UNSW staff, the Arc, Colleges and students on response strategies to ensure UNSW plays a leading role nationally - in teaching, research and operations.

Environmental initiatives often deal more with what cannot be seen than what can. However, a walk around Kensington campus will highlight a few of the more visible improvements.

The first stage of the UNSW Green Trail (www.greentrail.unsw.edu.au) was opened by the VC earlier this year, highlighting local “bush tucker” plants. Later stages will showcase UNSW environment-related research projects and teaching programs.

On top of the Quadrangle building, a large photovoltaic array is making the most of our sunny spring weather - the kiosk near the bottom of the Basser Steps lets users keep track of the energy pumped back into the grid, and the greenhouse gas emissions avoided.

Less obvious (because it’s underground!) is the semicircular percolation pit beneath the Village Green, which collects storm water runoff from nearly 70% of the campus and infiltrates it back into the Botany Sands aquifer, to replace the bore water used on campus for irrigation and other uses which don’t require drinkable water.

UNSW this year began implementing a Towards Zero Waste program (www.recycling.unsw.edu.au) which so far has seen some two-thirds of the University’s solid waste recovered or greenhouse-stabilised. We have also completed Water and Energy Saving Action Plans for the University - in the latter instance, a $3 million spend over the next four years is expected to result in annual savings of $1 million, and greenhouse emission reductions of over 30,000 tonnes a year.

The Environment Unit runs a range of programs in which students can get involved, in particular EcoColleges, for students “living in”, and UNSW LandCare, focused on revegetating the land and neutralising the greenhouse emissions of the University’s vehicle fleet.

The UNSW Landcare Group and the tree planting weekends are a collection of students, local and international, environment unit staff, various people from the UNSW community and Capertee Valley community, including collaboration with community groups, such as the Regent Honeyeater Protection Program and a few experts for good measure.

Landcare have organised another weekend of dirty tree-planting in the Capertee Valley, to be held on the weekend of the APEC conference, September 7-9, also Threatened Species Week. There will also be a guided bushwalk, star-gazing, delicious and nutritious vegetarian meals and a live performance by the Fuji Collective for the September event. The tree planting weekends have a strong focus on biodiversity. The saplings planted are grown from seeds collected in the local Capertee Valley area. This helps to re-establish habitat for the Regent Honeyeater and numerous other threatened species.

The number of trees UNSW Landcare will be planting is enough to offset the entire UNSW car fleet!

The UNSW Bookshop has been trying to change consumer behaviour by discouraging plastic bag use by introducing reusable bags. Upon introducing the reusable bags the Bookshop also introduced a 10c levy, which raised $250. The Bookshop has kindly donated this to UNSW Landcare to help fund the tree planting weekend. Not only that, but the Bookshop then matched the revenue raised by the bag levy with a further $250. UNSW Landcare would like to extend their thanks to the award-winning UNSW Bookshop. The Arc and its members also think it’s great that the UNSW Bookshop is undertaking great initiatives in support of the environment!
A big shout out to Edita Knowler, winner of the awesome city to surf Contiki holiday. Thanks to everyone who did the membership survey, we’ve got a lot of valuable information that we’re sifting through, and we’re coming closer to a membership plan for next year.

Also thanks to everyone who’s been leaving comments in the Delta Force Suggestion book on Facebook. Two of them I’ll talk about now: bikes and beds (or hammocks) on campus.

Firstly, the Bike Club at UNSW is awesome. If you want to get any questions answered about biking, chat to them. They meet regularly on the Quad Lawn, Wednesdays, 1-5pm. They’re the people fixing bikes and being generally helpful. Also if you want, it’s possible to borrow a bike to get around.

I like biking because it tends to be of equal time to, or faster than public transport, and it’s really easy to find a park. The one thing I don’t know how to do properly is maintenance and repair on bikes. This is where the Bike Club can be very useful. They currently can teach you basic bike maintenance, and are looking at getting a professional bike mechanic in to run short workshops on this campus. These are little things that are hard to find out about, but incredibly useful.

Another thing that is very useful to know (and everyone has an opinion on) is good places to sleep on campus. There is no official line on sleeping on campus, and there are no facilities to support the power (or longer than) nap. Unofficially, the Women’s Room is a great place to sleep if you’re female, and I know people who’ve made good use of the Webster couch-things.

The fact is, power naps are actually good for you and for productivity, and if we want to start being awesome and ground-breaking, we should facilitate some kind of comfortable place where all students can nap if needs be. Some universities in the US have sleep cubicles, I don’t quite know how they work, but I plan to conduct research as soon as I finish this column (good timing).

That’s all from me, Happy APEC. See you next week. Same Blitz time, same Blitz channel. I’m still here everyone...

Carissa Simons
The state of Sydney’s Theatre

The Sydney Theatre Company’s production of The Lost Echo was an eight hour epic which ended with the actors turning their backs to the audience, each of whom had paid $69 to be there.

And the Sydney theatre industry wonders why their audiences have disappeared.

The Lost Echo’s writer and director, Barry Kosky, said the show would “break theatrical boundaries” and confront the audience. One act featured a woman performing oral sex, then gagging on white foam. Other acts included a man urinating on a park bench and red prosthetic penises being rubbed until they bled.

Confronting? Yes.
The type of theatre that most Sydneysiders want to see? No.

If someone wants to see masturbation on stage, they’ll usually go to Kings Cross, not to the Sydney Theatre Company. As audience member Susan Forrestor said, “Before [STC’s] Mother Courage and The Lost Echo I’d never felt embarrassed for actors before.”

Another person who had been subjected to the eight hour marathon, commented on the Sydney Morning Herald’s theatre blog, “I felt that I was being forced to watch arty people mentally masturbate about how wonderful it is to be creative in a way that is superior, and makes all the rest of us torrid consumers of it, superfluous to them.”

And it’s not just the STC which is suffering. The Company B 2006 season shows Capricornia and Peribañez, were both poorly attended. Both were critical successes, but audiences found them passionless and suffering. The Company B 2006 season numbers during the 2006 season has past their use-by-date.

According to the Seymour Centre’s front of house manager, Buck Buckingham, declining audience numbers during the 2006 season has resulted in all the major, government funded “flagship” companies scrambling for the subscriber buck.

“A lot of multiple subscribers I’ve talked to are considering giving up one or two of them because they’re just not getting anything out of it anymore,” he says.

It’s not only the big boys of the Sydney theatre scene who are panicking. Independent theatre is also struggling to find a crowd. To The Green Fields and Beyond, Unspoken and Bangers and Mash, are the three productions that were re-staged as part of the Best of Independent Theatre Festival (BITE). These shows were some of the best productions of the 2005 season. All had staged interstate productions, and Bangers and Mash had toured internationally. Yet shows were cancelled because the cast outnumbered audience bookings, according to Seymour theatre technician Daniel McCusker. “It’s such a shame to see really amazing theatre onstage, when no-one’s in the audience.”

So why isn’t there an audience to play to? Especially when Melbourne is producing more shows, and still maintaining strong audience numbers? Ryan Williams, former Sydney-sider turned Melbournite, thinks he has the answer. “The general public is far more supportive of theatre in Melbourne. Theatre is accepted as a natural part of culture.” Keira Daley, co-director and founder of Twisted Melon Productions notes that in other cities, such as Melbourne, “people are willing to try new things, see new bands, watch new plays, yet Sydney-siders are generally suspicious of the unfamiliar. Most of them are barely aware that theatre goes on in this town, let alone want to see it.”

SMH theatre writer, Siobhan Doran, agrees that Sydney doesn’t promote itself as a “cultural city” in the same way that Melbourne does, and as a result, Sydney-siders are more interested in the newest bar, than the premiers of a Pulitzer-award winning play.

To be fair, Sydney also traditionally has more economic setbacks than their interstate counterparts. The major companies in both Sydney and Melbourne receive similar amounts of Federal and State arts funding, but the situation for independent theatre makers or small companies changes drastically once they cross the border.

In a single round of 2006 funding, Arts Victoria released grants to support 250 independent artists and small companies. These grants, ranging from $5,000 to $30,000, enabled artists to create and perform original work. Victorian Minister for the Arts and Women’s Affairs, Ms. Mary Delahuntly said, “As a result of these grants some of this state’s best and brightest will, in the next year or so, develop and deliver exciting and thought-provoking work.” Arts Victoria is also contributing $6 million over the next four years, to stimulate Victoria’s small and medium-sized companies and venues. Head north and you’ll find that the NSW Department for the Arts, Sport and Recreation funding is focused towards the top levels of NSW theatre.

Without state funding, it’s difficult for independent theatre to make a profit. Especially when you take into account the increasingly large overheads for theatre hire and insurance. The Stables Theatre in Darlinghurst only seats 120 people, yet hire costs $1500 or 30% of the ticket sales, whichever is greater, per week.

In the hope of breaking even, or making a profit, the cost of venue hire in Sydney is generally passed onto the audience member. If you’ve bought a theatre ticket in the last year, you’ll know that Sydney theatre tickets are not cheap. In the larger theatres, the worst seats in the house will still cost $60-$80. You could go to the cinema every night of the week for that price. And that doesn’t take into account the cost of petrol, parking, dinner or drinks.

Even tickets to a Bell Shakespeare production will cost $10 more, on average, in Sydney than the same show in Melbourne or Canberra. If you are a concession card holder, a Sydney Theatre Company offering will set you back $56. At the Melbourne Theatre Company, it will cost $26. With those prices, you could see two MTC plays for every one play at the STC. Before you decide to pack your bags and head to Melbourne, remember that cheaper tickets will not make up for the cost of flights and hotels.

One of the few agreements amongst theatre-goers and makers, is that Sydney’s theatre scene fails to provide a theatre for the masses. As Keira Daley said, companies like the STC are “prepared for their characters to be working class, but not their audience.” There is also the cheap, fringe and performance art theatre found in Newtown, Darlinghurst and Parramatta. But there is little in between. Nor is there a strong effort to attract new audiences with moderately priced, narrative based, accessible theatre.

As NIDA student, Teegan Hopkins, points out, “In Sydney, you only see fringe theatre if you’re a theatre buff, or know someone in the cast or crew. You see a STC or Company B production for the same reasons. Or if you’re a subscriber from the North Shore. And the end of the day, Sydney theatre sees itself as elite. It just isn’t interested in providing a theatre for the masses.”

Unlike other “cultural pastimes,” such as movies and television, people are generally not introduced to theatre at an early age. Seymour Centre’s Daniel McCusker says, “We need to build the grassroots support, and that has to be on a community level. People need to grow up watching theatre, be a young adult going to the theatre, and they will keep going after that.”

Despite this, theatre can be popular in Sydney, just like it is in Berlin, New York, London and even Auckland. It just needs to remember that it serves its audience, not just itself. All levels of Sydney’s theatre scene seem to have forgotten that the average audience member just wants to be entertained, not constantly confronted. Theatre is capable of revealing the most basic universal truths, in the most enlightening and compelling of ways. As Complicite theatre director, Annabel Arden says, “Theatre is still fundamentally about telling stories. You know when you’ve done it, there’s a sort of unity in the room. It’s quite rare.”

THURSDAY 20 SEPTEMBER
In a world that is ever-changing, one thing that has remained over hundreds of years is the teachings of Shakespeare. So why is Shakespeare still relevant to modern society?

Despite numerous cultural changes since the English Renaissance, ‘human nature’ (love, hate and revenge) has not changed much. And Shakespeare is very good at depicting the psychological elements of human behaviour, says Associate Professor Richard Madelaine, “Shakespeare is very good at exploring human motivations” which we “still care about very much.”

Madelaine comments that the passionate romance and the tortured tragedy that Shakespeare depicted “still goes on these days,” and further, “most of us are interested in the basic issues of human relationships.” Shakespeare fans comment on his masterful ability to dramatise the important issues in relationships, obviously within a specific social and cultural context. To understand his works properly we have to get a grip on the differences between his day and our own. Thus he remains popular with students and the general public.

Because Shakespearean language is so complex, are there any skills needed to understand his language? Awareness and practice are key, says Madelaine. You need a conscious awareness of the nuances and the complex meanings of words. This is important, as they have changed a great deal since the period of Shakespeare’s writing. One of the best ways to come to terms with the differences is to make sure you actually understand what’s being said. This can be achieved through the use of a good modern edition.

What are the top plays and why are they important to the general public? There have been various surveys and they all come up with different contenders. A recent one put Anthony and Cleopatra at the top of the list. Hamlet remains one of the top plays as it is capable of being read in so many different ways and so appeals to a wide range of people,” says Madelaine. Romeo and Juliet is a perpetual favourite, as it appeals to young people in a very immediate sense — although increasingly, young people are puzzled by Romeo and Juliet’s problems and wonder why they don’t simply get together and ignore all the social restrictions.

Though tragedies reign supreme in the polls, comedies should not entirely be erased from the equation. A Midsummer Night’s Dream continues to appeal to a wide range of people, but some interesting comedies, like The Merry Wives of Windsor, have gone out of fashion. The T empest, which is formally a tragicomedy, is frequently staged now because post-colonial critics have convinced us that it's a play about colonial repression.

Madelaine also thinks today a narrower range of Shakespearean plays are being staged and read. Over the last few decades, commercial theatres have taken too much notice of HSC syllabuses and too pessimistic a view of audience expectation, though the Bell Shakespeare Company did successfully revive Pericles and, more recently, Measure for Measure.

Some say that Shakespeare’s depictions of people and relationships are past their used-by date. However, if this was the case, one would wonder why it has not faded from our theatres and libraries. Whatever you may think of Shakespeare, continued popularity speaks volumes about his power to move audiences.
Casablanca is one of the top films set in a key moment in American history. Humphrey Bogart stars as Rick Blaine, the cynical yet secretly scarred leading man, and Ingrid Bergman as his long-lost love interest Ilsa, combine for an unforgettable epic. The film is set in World War II at the height of the Nazis power in the city of Casablanca in Morocco, a pitstop for thousands of refugees fleeing Germany for America.

Instead of continuing with the exodus, Rick chooses to stay in Casablanca to run a bar, and initially comes across as a painful, relationships with others. The arrival of Ilsa with her husband at the bar reveals the source of Rick's hard-natured character, and the cause of his silent vendetta against the world.

We can easily empathise with the barriers erected by Rick to avoid feeling past pain, and can equally understand the logic behind Ilsa's choice, but knowing those reasons still leaves us unsatisfied. Being stuck in a state of discontent is the crux of the romance film but nowhere is it embodied better than in the forbidden, fantastically repressed moments of Rick and Ilsa.

Casablanca proves that chunks of flesh don't need to be flashed to communicate the age-old tale of desire and unrequited love. Debated as one of the best films of all time, Casablanca has been described as "a film for anyone who has ever had a heartbreaking choice to make, for film lovers who enjoy unpredictable endings, and for anyone who has lost a love."

Best Quotes:

Yvonne: Where were you last night?
Rick: That's so long ago, I don't remember.

Yvonne: Will I see you tonight?
Rick: I never make plans that far ahead.

Major Strasser: What is your nationality?
Rick: I'm a drunkard.

Captain Renault: That makes Rick a citizen of the world.

[Ugarte is the official who sells exit visas]

Ugarte: You despise me, don't you?
Rick: If I gave you any thought I probably would.

Romance Factor: ★★★★★
Corny Factor: ★★★★☆ It was quite funny actually.
Steamy Factor: ★★★★☆ It was hot stuff back in the 1940s!

Screening at the Chauvel Cinema in Paddington from Thursday 6 - Sunday 16 September, the Russian Resurrection Film Festival includes a diverse range of the scariest, funniest, and most dramatic Russian films.

Highlights include Wolfhound, an epic fantasy movie set in medieval Russia that features enough “sword wielding muscle and dark arts sorcery to satisfy any feverish imagination.” Wolfhound was the highest grossing film in Russia in 2006. The festival also includes the feel-good comedy Heat and the moving drama Ellipsis. For more information see www.russianresurrection.com.

To win a Double Pass to any of the features at the Russian Resurrection Film Festival, simply answer the following question:

What is the geographically largest nation in the world?

To win, simply answer the following question: In which sea did the Kursk sink?

The Kursk: A Submarine in Troubled Waters is a feature documentary exploring one of the biggest naval disasters of the 21st century.

In August 2000, the pride of the Russian navy and its 118 crew lay at the bottom of the Barents Sea. The Unthinkable had happened. The Kursk, the world’s most technologically-advanced nuclear submarine and pride of the Russian Fleet, had sunk.

The Kursk is constructed like a “counter-espionage” documentary. It underlines the gap between a nation torn apart by a human tragedy and a government willing to stop at nothing to reach its global aims.

To win, simply answer the following question: In which sea did the Kursk sink?
MONDAY
POLITICS AND THE ENVIRONMENT
The Arc will be holding a public lecture featuring Peter Garrett (Shadow Environment Minister) as well as Kerry Nettle (The Greens) to outline their policies on the environment. With a federal election looming, this is a great way to become informed about the environmental credentials of the candidates. In the afternoon, the Arc’s Enviro Collective will be holding a lobbying workshop to show you how to make a positive difference in your local electorate.

TUESDAY
NUCLEAR ENERGY: FRIEND OR FOE?
Holly Creenaune (Friends of the Earth) will be speaking on nuclear power and dispelling commonly-held myths about the technology. The afternoon will include banner painting and t-shirt design. Get involved and design a great t-shirt or banner.

WEDNESDAY
FOOD AND THE ENVIRONMENT
Wednesday is an action-packed day with lots happening, so there is something for everyone.

The Arc’s Enviro Collective will be running a workshop entitled The Politics of Food, about how diet is a major factor in sustainable living. Speakers will talk on subjects such as “What is a food co-op?” and “How to eat sustainably”. Genetics and Food will also be screening a film not to be missed for those of you who want to know what they are eating.

The Rock for Renewables free Roundhouse gig is on from 5pm. Sydney band Fuji Collective (www.myspace.com/fujicollective) will be performing and we will be preparing a yummy Food Co-op BBQ. Stalls from a variety of Environmental NGO’s including the Nature Conservation Council (NCC) and The Wilderness Society (TWS) as well as the Arc and the Enviro Collective will have loads of information available to help you on your way to becoming a more sustainable user of our environment.

Come along to enjoy chilled beats, drinks and a sweet UNSW Food Co-op BBQ. You will be lovin’ mother earth in no time.

THURSDAY
RENEWABLES DAY
The Arc’s Enviro Collective will be giving a workshop on how to construct your own solar cooker out of kitchen materials. Solar cookers are amazingly simple (cardboard and aluminium foil) and they really get hot enough to cook food. The afternoon will feature a bike-riding workshop. Learn how to ride the greenest transport around.
Do Nerds Socialise?

CSE Revue is a sketch comedy show started by students from the School of Computer Science & Engineering in 2002. The show incorporates the very best of videos, live music, dancing, and sketch comedy. Five years later, the society consists of over 400 members from all over campus and is about to put on their sixth revue. Blitz speaks to CSE director Sam and producer Jane to shed some light on what CSE Revue brings to the masses.

Blitz: Define CSE Revue in a few words.
Sam: Singing! Dancing! Sketches! Blubber! Oddment!
Jane: Hmm, nerdy, innovative, full of passion and gay jokes.

Blitz: How did you get involved with CSE Revue?
Jane: One of my friends was producing the show 2 years ago. They signed me up and I had so much fun that year I haven’t been able to leave.
Sam: Way back in first year, I met a bunch of revuers and they took me in. It was pretty cool; I instantly had about 50 more friends who spent an awful lot of time talking about CSE Revue.

Blitz: What can we expect from the show?
Jane: Expect the unexpected, CSE Revue only gets better as the years go by and everyone has been working super-hard this year to give our audiences one of the best shows to date.

Blitz: I’ve heard a rumour that there’s some exciting stuff happening before the show each night.
Sam: It’s all still a bit secret right now. Let’s just say that this year the show doesn’t just start when you take your seat.

Blitz: Do Nerds Socialise?
Jane: Nerds don’t like to socialise?
Sam: Well, I like the design of Macs, but then I like PCs for playing games. Actually, I think I’d be a Nintendo. Who needs productivity when you have Wii Boxing?

Blitz: What distinguishes you from other revues?
Sam: (laughs) Well, our name is harder to pronounce for starters. Really, though, we’re the smaller, more intimate revue. You know, we call in the morning.

Blitz: What do you think distinguishes you from other revues?
Jane: I think it’s the atmosphere of the society. With CSE Revue you get to do more than just be part of a show. You build lasting friendships with people who you will study, work and play with all year round.
