Administrative history
note:
On 17 August 1989 the Vice-Chancellor approved the creation of the Department of Industrial Design. The department was to be "part of the Graduate School of the Built Environment for a period not exceeding four years, and thereafter within an independent department or a school of industrial design, as is then deemed appropriate" (file 891253). The first head of the department was John Redmond. On 29 June 1992 Council approved the establishment of an independent Department of Industrial Design (resolution CL92/38b). At the meeting of Council on 13th September, 1993, the name of the faculty was changed to the Faculty of the Built Environment (resolution CL93/73g). On 25 August 1997 Council disestablished all schools and departments within the Faculty of the Built Environment - including the Department of Industrial Design - and created in their place a single School of the Built Environment effective from 31 December 1997 (resolution CL97/66/9c).
