Dear Reader,

Tempus fugit or, in English, time flies! Funnily enough, although "tempus fugit" has its origins traced back to the Roman poet Virgil, the White Rabbit in Alice in Wonderland was the first character in literature to use the expression.

It's just over half way until the end of semester (and end of the year, and the start of a long, well deserved break!), and it's not looking to slow down any time soon. Not only is spring in the air (it's about time!) but I've already started planning what I'm doing next year. Now, you may think I have a lot of time on my hands, but the truth is - I'm superduper organised. It's been drummed in to me from high school to set goals and strive to achieve them, and planning ahead, to me, is second nature. We all procrastinate, we all have off days where all we want is for our doona to swallow us up and not have to face anyone. So setting a goal (and achieving it) keeps me on my toes. It's not those New Years resolutions that you set for yourself, where you say "I'm going to find my own Mr Darcy!" and the next thing you know, you're dating some guy (or girl) who really isn't that interested in you (but they're hot!) but they don't sweep you off your feet, they're just ... convenient. Realistic, in my opinion, is, "I'm going to put $50 aside each week and save up for a new car", or "I want to write for Blitz and I'm going to write some articles and send them in". My goals are for me, and me only, and as self-centred as that may sound, one thing I have learnt is that, if you don't put yourself out their and achieve what you want to achieve, and do things for other people instead of yourself, you will never truly be satisfied. This is possibly the only chance you get of having an ego and it's perfectly a-okay!

So, I will leave you all with a motivational quote for the week, and hope my words of wisdom leave you with some food for thought:

"Whether or not you reach your goals in life depends entirely on how well you prepare for them and how badly you want them. You're eagles! Stretch your wings and fly to the sky." Ronald McNair.

Chair's Report

Dear reader,

By the time this little mag has reached your hot little hands (or cold and overly large hands?) it's probably almost old news... but damn the Olympics were riveting!

I know I'm already a confirmed Oly fanatic – but there was so much controversy and surprise! From world record holders getting smashed (Sullivan, Hackett, Jones) to Sally McLellan's unexpected track medal, it was far from clear cut! Heck, no one even seemed to be able to decide between celebrating and chastising the host nation- switching wildly between phenomenal architecture and ceremonies, to human rights, to their amazing medal tally, to unfounded drug accusations, and back again!

Yet I'd have to say (and 26% of people polled at yahoo.com agree with me, hah!) one of my favourite moments was when Aussie Matthew Mitcham DOMINATED the 10m platform dive! He was so genuinely ecstatic when he nailed his last dive (and the excitement at first was for a silver medal he thought he had won, let alone gold with the best-score-ever-in-history!)

I watched him being interviewed the next morning (it really is your duty as a patriot of Australia to watch as much of the games as possible!) and was really surprised to see how much of a big deal they kept making of him being a gay athlete.

Now don't get me wrong, I thought it was great that he felt comfortable talking openly about his partner, Lachlan, when first questioned by SMH in the lead up to the games (and I find it quite surprising that he was the ONLY openly gay male athlete in the whole Olympics), but for the panellists to ask question after question about how being gay and coming out affected his preparation, performance, mindset during the last dive?!

They looked to me like a bunch of straight people trying SO HARD to pull off talking ordinarily and comfortably about being gay, that they inadvertently revealed how 'different' they really saw him. Matthew seemed kind of confused by the repeated questions – he clearly didn't perceive this as a 'big pressure' like they implied (amazingly enough, his sexual preference was NOT what was running through his mind before that last dive!)

I guess it just got me thinking about how big the world of improvement is beyond just tolerance...

If more nominations are received than there are positions available, online voting will be conducted. For further information on who is eligible to vote, please visit the Arc website www.arc.unsw.edu.au.

The term of office for the above positions is 1 year beginning December 2008.

The electoral roll will close on the same day as nominations, which is Thursday 4 September.

Please send any enquires to the Returning Officer at sdc.ro@arc.unsw.edu.au.

Nitasha Prasad Returning Officer

They say no one throws a party like the gays.

Well, whoever "they" are, maybe they're onto something. I know I'd rather be at a gay club than a straight one any night of the week; I get groped less and the music's better. My gay buddies have better – and louder – birthday parties. Even the Queerspace is a fun place to be. So it should come as no surprise than that UNSW queer parties on campus basically rock my little socks off.

Firstly, they're usually smaller than those crazy party nights in the Roundhouse. Don't get me wrong, I love a good Roundhouse party every now and then – and let's note that Oktoberfest is coming up – but it's not always what you're in the mood for. Parties run by the Queer Department are usually smaller – but that's not always a bad thing. In this case, small translates as intimate, and it's a whole lot easier to make conversation with the object of your affections when they can hear you.

Next, parties run by the Queer Department are usually in smaller venues – either the Queerspace or the Club Bar at the Roundhouse. Which makes it a whole lot easier to spot people you know, and then harder to lose them. Given I am basically short; this means a lot to me. Also, if I put my bag or jacket down, the chances of my re-finding them are a lot better. And there's never been a fire evacuation during a queer party that I am aware of.

Finally, the queer parties usually have some sort of show. Not that other UNSW parties don't, but there are fewer people at queer parties, so it's easier to see the show. Because it's not fair to know there are back-flipping drag queens and not be able to see them. You know what I'm saying.

Alright, now that I've sold you on the idea – there's been a few queer parties this year, all of them themed. But don't let that fuss you too much; not everyone shows up according to theme – goodness knows, I don't. So far there's been a Masquerade, an Eighties party, and Faux Pas themed party – that's right, where you were supposed to show up as something inappropriate. What's inappropriate at a queer party? Well, you should have been there to find out.

This being Queer Week, there will be a grand old bash. It's happening on Friday, that being the best day; thereby granting you the entire weekend to recover. The theme shall be "Queers on the Piss!", and the location is pub crawling up and down Oxford Street, starting at Kinselas. For more info, contact queer@arc. unsw.edu.au or check out What's On.

Stanley Hong I love Jane Austen! Let me shout it out for the entire world to hear: I love Jane Austen and I don't care what anyone thinks. Yes, I can be a sports obsessed, thinks. Yes, I can be a sports obsessed, thinks willing Neanderthal. And if causing beer swilling Neanderthal. And if causing havoc at the Roundhouse was an Olympic havoc at the Roundhouse was an Olympic sport, I would be a multiple gold medallist.

However, I do have a soft and tender side that adores fluffy bunnies and Elizabeth Bennett. Ah, my dream gal. Strongwilled, intelligent, and gorgeous. Furthermore, she doesn't follow the norms and expectations of society, which makes her even sexier.

The reason why I am coming out with my love declaration for all things Austen is that a recent debate at the Roundhouse triggered my 'ghetto' side. Here is the scenario: I am sitting at the Unibar enjoying a few cold ones in a 'classy' manner when 2 female friends decided they'd try to pick a fight and tell me Jane Austen sucks. They also add that they think the female leads tend to be annoying! This was of course akin to telling me that Sydney is better than Melbourne (FYI: it's not).

Why do I love Jane Austen? Well, not only is she one of the few females that have been lauded as a great canonical author, but she is also a kickass storyteller. Her ability to paint a vivid picture of life during the time period she lived, whilst breaking social taboos at the same time, is something to behold.

Austen's female leads can be stubborn and pigheaded, but they're ultimately vibrant and their own woman. Who could not want the Dashwood sisters to find love after tragedy in Sense and Sensibility? How can one not be frustrated that Emma Woodhouse cannot see the path to true love right in front of her? And ultimately, who doesn't love Elizabeth Bennet? What a woman! And yes, I realise this is the second time I have declared my love for her. So it is may be time for a literary equivalent of a restraining order.

FIELD PAR

SENSE AND SEN

Euro

NN N

It is easy to identify with the characters in Austen's books because they're seeking the same universal goals as all of us: to fall in love. Love may leave us blind, dead, and dumb, but it is ultimately redemptive. I might be a cynic – but secretly I am a hopeless romantic. Just like Ms. Elizabeth Bennett.

As we conclude this journey of unbridled passion for a long deceased author, may I indulge with you upon which character I most identify with? Mr. Collins from Pride and Prejudice because, like me, he is 'cool' and I know that everyone reading this thinks the same too (cough, cough).

HOW MUCH IS THAT IPHONE in the window?

Fawning over the new Apple iPhone? Perhaps its time to upgrade and you're just looking for a usable phone with a half decent camera? Confused by the maze of plans and jargon? Buying a new phone can be fun but only if you know what you're looking for. Blitz has done some research on both plans and phone features to help guide you through the confusion of the mobile world.

Remember to ask about the freebies especially, if you're signing up for a contract.

Being on a plan will, in many cases, give you a 'free' phone (subject to terms and conditions), but it usually means signing a contract for 12 or usually 24 months. Also remember the phone isn't 'free', rather the cost is built into the plan.

Be careful of companies offering a popular or more expensive phone on a 'cheap' $20-$30 plan. These are often targeted at low income people, i.e. students, but have limited calls included that often sees you overuse and end up with a much larger bill.

Contracts may also have large termination charges as the companies want to get back the money for the phone (plus a bit extra...) and can range from around $500 up to the thousands depending on the phone and the contract.

If you do go with a contract be sure to ask about the warranty and the exit penalties. Also enquire if there is insurance, as you probably don't want to chance losing that expensive phone and being stuck on a 24 month contract with huge termination costs.

Prepaid plans on the other hand, give you control over what you spend. However, the down side is usually a higher call rate, the risk of running out of credit, and the need to buy or provide your own phone.

And how does a cap work exactly? You've probably seen ads promising you between $50 and $1000 dollars worth of extra calls. Well, let's be clear - they aren't just giving away extra calls. What happens is that the phone company will usually increase your call rate significantly. Then they agree not to charge you for what you use between your minimum commitment and the top of your cap. It works great unless you exceed your cap, then if you're on a billed plan, you can be charged at the higher rate if you overspend.

So before you go rushing to get your Apple iPhone, work out if your carrier has the best deal, if not take your business elsewhere.

OK, so you figured out the plan you want. Now for the phone. Here is the list of the key features to look out for:

In many respects, the Apple iPhone is not the first phone to combine MP3 and mobile. Most phones theses days will come with a computer cable to transfer music and photos. All you need to check is whether the phone has an expandable memory.

Then all you need to do is buy a memory card, which vary between 1 gigabyte (roughly 100-150 songs) for around $15-$30, while 8 gigabyte (800-1000 songs) will set you back closer to $100. It might not be as cool as an iPhone but it will save you having to carry around both a phone and MP3 player.

Internet/Data

Internet on a tiny screen may seem silly, but today more and more phones are getting way better with this. The modern choice of phones can easily surf the web, pull up a street map, read the newspaper and check your email. The obvious catch being, most browsing isn't free.

While plans will vary, internet is usually an extra cost and these days will often require its own 'data plan', starting with an additional $5 a month to your bill and rising quickly.

VI-FI (also internet)

Ok, so you want internet and don't want to pay through the nose. Well then, check if the phone has WI-FI this is localised wireless web access and means you won't have to pay the mobile providers to surf the web

If you are just after a phone camera that will give you a printable photo you need to look for something with between 2-3 mega-pixels. Let's be clear, this quality won't replace a proper digital camera, but at least you can recognise yourself.

Other stuff... GPS, TV etc.

With technology constantly bring updated, added features such as GPS (the modern equivalent of maps and directions) and even pay television is also available.

These added services come at a price, starting at between $10-$30 a month on top of the plan. So before you sign up for the comedy channel ask yourself whether you really need another means of procrastination...

Lastly, remember to ask about the freebies especially, if you're signing up for a contract. Phone stores will sometimes give you additional discounts, free car chargers, cases even blue-tooth headsets but you have to ask what they have on offer and what that store, will 'throw in' for your business

> Be sure to ask about the warranty and the exit penalties. Also enquire if there is insurance

Being

Stanley Hong

Merriam-Webster's dictionary defines "professional" as:

(2) b: having a particular profession as a permanent career

Well, if that is the case; slap me silly and call me Sally, because this reporter is indeed a "professional" student.

This writer is currently embarking on a second undergraduate degree meaning that 6 years have passed since I was a naïve first year.

Oh ... my ... gosh!

That means there are students currently at UNSW who were starting high school when I started uni! All of a sudden I have the urge to talk about the "good ol' days", whilst swallowing a whole bunch of blue pills to compensate for um, er, certain inadequacies.

Yes, the shameful realisation that my 'permanent career' is attending tutes, whilst drinking myself under the table every Tuesday afternoon suggests the following 'sobering' reality: that my professional existence is defined by academia.

Argh! How did it get to this point? There was so much potential. I was smart – no, I wasn't book learning smart but I do know my way around the 'tough' streets of the Eastern suburbs of Sydney, and I can play a mean game of Donkey Kong. Maybe I can make a career out of that? Childhood friends have passed me by: they're embarking on wonderful careers, planning overseas trips to exotic locations, and engaging in regular fine dining. Me? Well, a trip to the local supermarket constitutes a holiday and fine dining all in one convenient package. I get to escape reality by dreaming of the salmon steak that I could never afford, while purchasing such 'exotic' foods such as ramen noodles, or soup in cardboard packaging, instead of soup in a can.

Do you want to know what is the worst part of this tale of abject misery my ever-so curious readers? I don't actually even like what I am studying! Yes, it seems I do enjoy a bit of self flagellation, hence, why I am still being told what to read, how to think, and when to burp?!

However, all you perceptive readers out there are wondering out loud at this point, whilst putting a voodoo curse on me: "Why on earth are you studying something you don't like?" Well, the simple answer is this: my first mode of study was for the love and this one is for a 'career' of sortslf we haven't already covered the deep depths of my psychological despair in enough detail already, I have one last shocking confession: My dream is to actually write for a living so I don't even need a 'vocational' type course. But I do have standards. Being part of the Kevin Rudd golf team seems fun on paper, but doesn't impress any potential love interests.

So if you happen to see an old guy with greying hair talking about what could have been at the Roundhouse - chances are it's me.

"...my 'permanent career'

is attending tutes,

under the table every

Tuesday afternoon..."

CSE Revue CSE++ // Revue Goes Large

For the first time ever, the CSE Revue is finally hitting the Science Theatre! Filled with parodies reaching from Tokyo to Dagobah, the show promises to be one of the biggest productions on campus this year. It's showing in Week 8 only and you don't want to miss it!

The UNSW Computer Science and Engineering (CSE) Revue is a live annual sketch comedy show; a showcase of sketches, dance numbers, song parodies, and video shorts. The aim of the game is to make you laugh, and in true-nerd fashion the CSE Revue has kept a shiny track record since its inception in 2002.

Having formed a strong tradition for delivering hilariously witty shows, the CSE Revue has become one of the most highly anticipated comical events of the year; leaving audiences in awe of our special effects, stylised achievements in design, and our commitment to continually innovate.

To keep with tradition, the move to the Science Theatre will come with more than a few special surprises, as well as free show bags and door prizes every night. So, to catch this momentous event before it leaves as quickly as Lindsay Lohan from a car accident, make sure to get your tickets early!

TERTIARY MUSINGS FROM A QUEER GIRL GEORGIA CARTHEY

You'd think of all the places in the world, a university campus would be the one place where it's okay, straightforward, easy, to be gay. After all, it's been statistically shown that younger generations are significantly more accepting of queers than their parents, and far more willing to grant gay and lesbian rights to marriage, partner benefits, and equal rights. Cohorts as little as 5 years younger than the next show higher rates of acceptance. And uni students are all bleeding heart, greenie left wingers, right? Who's going to be more accepting?

Well, yes and no. No one on campus has ever yelled at me from a car window. And on some level, it's cool to be accepting of homosexuality; the idea of a gay panic defence in a court of law offends everyone with half a brain. Most girls have some sort of same-sex experience, or will at least mention having flirted with the idea. On the other hand, some guys will still resort to aggressive behaviour – if not violence – if their name and gay are used in the same sentence.

UNSW does a lot of things to support their queer population, and I appreciate that. I appreciate there's some funding for a safe Queerspace, that there are gay and lesbian officers on campus, that I can reach advice on homosexual safe sex practices, that there is support for queer students having a hard time, that we have a pride week towards celebrating queer difference. I appreciate all of those things. That doesn't change the fact that queer issues are perceived as irrelevant to a great majority of students on campus and I remain a sticking point.

My mother always says that I have a habit of being difficult for the sake of it. Well, maybe. But this isn't that: I didn't choose to be gay, I have no particular wish to stick out in this particular crowd, and frankly, it makes my life more difficult than I'd choose for it to be a great proportion of the time. But I'm not saying I don't want to be gay; I've had a lot of practice and I'm pretty good at it, really. What I'd rather is that everyone else was gay too. That way, being queer wouldn't be something remarkable. It wouldn't be something I'd have to point out to new acquaintances at some stage; that I'd have to casually work into a conversation. I wouldn't have to have the startled response every week of, "Oh, you're gay?" I also like fish and chips, does that bother anyone? They're about equally significant to me.

Maybe it isn't that big a deal in the scheme of things, it's not something I really mind doing; beyond that I am just used to it. This is my life; I come out on a weekly basis, and it's unlikely to change. The thing is, it never gets easier, and you never stop worrying about when someone's going to turn away from you because of it.

That's where the SRC Queer Department can help.

They provide a support network for all lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans, and otherwise queer identifying students of UNSW. They are willing to help students with any concerns relating to their sexuality, or if you just want to hang out with people, without the difficulties, and with complete acceptance.

UNSW Queerspace

I recently had a conversation with a good friend of mine about her design course. She was confused, as her course reader indicated that she had a tutorial dealing with architectural planning for gays and lesbians. I don't recall her exact phrase, but the general content of her comment was, "Why do gays and lesbians need different types of planning to the rest of us, it's not like they're that different."

Well, maybe. And I appreciate the sentiment. But at the same time it demonstrates a generalised mindset in the community, where queer individuals don't get a lot of support for or recognition of their needs. If you're wondering – and I don't take the course, so I don't know for sure – but I'm pretty sure that her planning tutorial would have been about the need for safe spaces for gays and lesbians, and the presence of non-specific heterosexual areas.

space available to all queer and queer-friendly students on campus. It's located on Level 9 of the Applied Sciences Building, which is really the back end of nowhere, but helps maintain anonymity for queer students who may not necessarily be 'out' to their friends and parents. It's open for three social meetings a week – see What's On for more details – and during Queer Week, will be open for events and talks held by the Queer Department.

All of which makes a nice little segue to my next point which is – happily, UNSW does have safe spaces for gay and lesbian students! Well – GLBTI students. For the uninitiated, that stands for Gay Lesbian for Gay Lesbian thersex; I find 'queer' a helpful catch-all. As a safe s use of the agreemen Queerspace it. That inc in the outs them and goesn't m for Gay Lesbian thersex; I find 'queer' a

The UNSW Queerspace – also open to COFA students – is a safe As a safe space, there are certain rules for the use of the Queerspace. There's a non-disclosure agreement – namely, anything you hear inside the Queerspace isn't for sharing with anyone outside of it. That includes identifying people you meet there in the outside world, as you may unintentionally out them and cause trouble in their personal lives. Also, just because it's primarily for queer students, that doesn't mean you get to be derogatory of anyone who isn't – it's a hetero-friendly space too.

Also, during meetings in the Queerspace are our friendly gay and lesbian counsellors on campus – Brandi Rieder and Andrew Rose. They are there to help with any queer-related problems you might be having – from identifying places to hang out and maybe try and pick up, to dealing with problems associated with outing yourself to friends and family. It's a comfortable place, so if you're queer and friendly, come on by one day.

Unearthed Thomas George

Unearthed is an uninspired horror flick that deals with a supposedly unstoppable alien monster that ravages the inhabitants of a remote town with its horrible premise and bad acting. It is a splatterfest that tries unconvincingly to build tension with its mediocre plot twists and campy characters. The highlight of the actors involved is Charlie Murphy (Eddie Murphy's unknown brother) whose major claim to fame is doing lines of cocaine with Rick James (Chappelle Show, Season 1). With a hard hitting cast of this calibre, it came as quite a shock when the movie lived up to my expectations by being awful and totally boring.

The premise is that of a small isolated town in the middle of nowhere. There is also an archaeological dig trying to find out why an Indian tribe died out in the area. In the process, they "unearth" the monster and wake it up. It now decides to kill everything because it's understandably grumpy after sleeping for 800 years. They can only stop it by using the same process that the ancient Indians did. Which begs the question, if the Indians managed to stop it, why did they die out? Unfortunately, it only gets worse from there because apparently, the ancient Indians had a way of refining uranium, which acted as a poison and put the silly little alien to sleep in the first place. How did this advanced tribe die out?

This movie is truly overshadowed by Charlie Murphy! Every scene he was in, all I could hear was Rick James screaming his name over and over again. It made me want to watch Chappelle's genius again. I lament over the fact that there seems to be no more good monster flicks left. I watched Alien after this to see how a movie made 30 years ago stood up to it. Alien left this movie battered and bleeding in the ground. Unearthed didn't scare me, it made me sad and nostalgic for better times. Get Alien instead and bury Unearthed, unwatched and unloved.

Tricky – Knowle West Boy DJ Anujual

Tricky's new album Knowle West Boy is versatile to say the least. From the opening bar-room blues track "Puppy Toy" to a percussive, grungy remix of Kylie Minogue's "Slow", this album has something for everyone.

With a host of voice artists at his disposal, Knowle West Boy delves into a wide variety of sounds, genres and emotions. The satanic, electronic sound of "Veronika" is reminiscent of the Sin City theme, with emotive and painful lyrics to boot. Tricky's gruff voice contrasts against the feminine, choral voices in many of the songs, but it is this same element that make the tracks unique. Both "Cross To Bear" and "School Gates" are perfect examples of this element in action, the latter an autobiographical inclusion in the album.

Standout tracks of the album would be "Joseph" and the aforementioned "Slow". The former reminds me of Massive Attack's "Teardrop"; a light but powerful keyboard riff repeated throughout, splashings of electric guitar thrown in for good measure, and the hook 'I sit up, I stand down'. Tricky's transformation of Kylie's "Slow" hits the mark like no other track on the album. Amazing upbeat drums accompany the grungy electric guitar, Tricky's vocals echo his partner's, and he personalises the lyrics to truly make the track his own.

Knowle West Boy is a veritable smorgasbord of unique, diverse tracks, and is definitely for those whose music taste is open to new and exciting combinations of sound.
